The Visible Action and Invisible Intermolecular Vibration.

How We Got Thermometers.

It is believed that Galilei made the first thermometer about the year 1595. It was an instrument of glass, consisting of a bulb from which a slender tube depended, open at its lower end, and there plunged into a vase containing some colored liquid, such as vinegar or wine.

The glass bulb was heated before the stem was immersed, and when the contained air cooled and contracted the fluid in the upright thermoscopic tube rose to a higher level. This simple and primitive apparatus is constantly made use of on the lecture table nowadays when some simple demonstration of the laws of heat is to be made.
